Exenterative Surgery for Pelvic Cancers: Current Practices and Future Directions

---

Dear Colleagues,

For many years pelvic exenteration has been undertaken at the Royal Marsden. The most common indication is recurrent pelvic cancer in previously irradiated patients who in addition often have also had chemotherapy and pelvic surgery. Pelvic exenteration is performed with curative intent in almost all cases.

This two-day conference is devoted to the practice of exenterative surgery. Although, these operations are numerically a small part of the practice of colorectal, urological and gynaecological cancer surgeons, they are resource and labour-intensive, requiring long operating times, intensive care and long hospitalisation. Key considerations are case selection, and a well-planned and coordinated team approach involving diagnostic specialists, surgical specialists including plastic and reconstructive surgeons, anaesthetists and clinical nurse specialists. The balance is to maximise outcome in terms of survival but minimise the short and long term morbidity, maintaining or improving the patient's quality of life. The conference will highlight current practice, recent improvements and innovations and take an optimistic and realistic look at future directions.

We do hope you will be able to join us for this exciting and challenging event.

King regards
